

I object to any action by the FCC that would effectively diminish any portion of Indiana's Telephone Privacy law for the reason that I was routinely, 8 to 10 calls per week, harassed by phone solicitors until I registered as a "do not call" with the Indiana Attorney General. I have for 20 years paid extra for a "non-listed" phone number with Ameritech. The ability of solicitors to obtain my phone number from sources unknown to me is an invasion of my home privacy and an unsolicited and welcome intrusion into my life. If the success of commerce depends on a standard being established by the FCC that the unwelcome intrusion of a person's home and a the invasion of their peace and family life is justified for the success of commerce then commerce is doomed. Where do we place the "No Trespassing" signs (notices) on unwanted communications in our homes? I can keep people off my real estate, yet I cannot keep them from invading my home when I am sleeping? Why must I register with every entity in commerce to be left alone? Do not negate the effects of state privacy laws. The commercial end does not justify the usurping of the peace and tranquility of the home.
